WILMINGTON, N. C., MONDAY, NOV. 20, 1854. The Anglo-French Alliance.

In spite of all external manifestations and high sounding words, an Anglo-French Alliance must always be an affair more or less hollow, which some unforeseen circumstances or unexpected kick-up may at any time blow sky-high. The truth is that the nations don't cordially like each other; at the bottom of of institutions of the same character in every State, all their specious pretensions of mutual friendship, lurks a spirit of jealousy and mistrust, and no real, genuine Frenchman has ever attempted to keep up the force of an entente cordiale with Great Britain .-That great political trader, Louis Phillippe, kept it up for a short time, but never sincerely, as the affair of the Spanish marriages showed, and he overreached himself. Having sacrificed his popularity at home to his Anglican affinities, he lost what support a British alliance might have given him, by his overweaning desire for the extension of the dynastic alliances of his family, and he fell. Whatever abilities Louis Napoleon may have, his life is a standing evidence of his character as a trickster, a man who holds himself superior to all obligations, save those imposed upon him by his own interest or ambition. He is not a genuine man-not a man to be trusted, and are pledged, because the very fact of a necessity for the British know it. His alliance with them will be perfectly sincere, so long as he can use it in furthertive alone prompted their alliance with him.

We publish from the Greensborough Patriot an article over the signature of "Reform," proposing a new system of banking in this State, to be based upon certificates of stock in the various Railroads of the State To us it appears plain that the system therein advocated, however plausible, is peculiarly erronecus in principle and dangerous in practice.-The disgraceful position of the Safety Fund Banks in many of the western States, and the dubious repute ought to "give pause" to the people of North Carolina, before entering upon any similar scheme. We take it that mere ultimate security is not all that is wanted in a currency,-present availability is quite as essential an item. Currency ought to be another name for "the ready," it ought to be based upon capital not otherwise invested-it is the representative of the accumulated capital of the country availa-

One can't eat a peach and have it-he can't invest ten thousand dollars in Railroads and then use the same ten thousand dollars for banking purposes Besides, no better plan could be hit upon for subjecting stocks to ruinous depreciation at every turn of the wheel, than making them subject to be cast upon the market for the redemption of currency for which they resorting to the sale of such stock held as security, would imply a pressure in the money market, and a ance of his own ends, as he knows that a similar mo- consequent low range of prices in the stock market to be doubly aggravated by the amount peremptorily

NOBLE SENTIMENTS OF SILAS WRIGHT .- The following noble sentiments, enunciated by the late Silas Wright, are particularly appropriate at the present time, when sectionalism and disunionism are rife in the land : "If there be those among us who, misled by a mistaken sympethy, or by sudden excitement, upon any subject, are forgetting their obligations to the whole country, to the constitution and the Union, let us use every effort of persuasion and example to awaken them to a sense of their dangerous error. William Aiken left Washington last evening for his residence in Charleston, South Carolina. The object of Mr. Aiken's visit to the seat of government was to effect a satisfactory arrangement between the Postmaster General and the South Carolina Railroad Company relative to the amount of compensation to be received by the latter for the transportation of the great southern mail over their improvement. It gives us much pleasure to state that a temporary arrangement, to expire on the 1st of January next, has been effected. In the mean time, it is to be hoped that congressional interposition may effect a permanent and general system of compensation, in consonance with the just wishes of the department and the true interest of the various railroad companies now employed in conveying the mails .- Washington Union, 16th inst.
